

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

To the Members of the Senior Classes of the Pennsylvania High Schools: As you near the end of your high school course you are considering with all the seriousness demanded of such an important matter just what is the best use you can make of the years that lie immediately before you. Undoubtedly you are aware of the importance of further training beyond that which the best high school can give. There are many colleges of high standing and reputation for men and women, and each person seeking a college which offers certain social or educational advantages will be able to obtain these in one of these schools. I therefore urge you to enter college on the completion of your high school course, if possible. The schools of the Commonwealth are in need of large numbers of college-trained people, and the demand for teachers of this broad training will increase as the years go by.

THOMAS E. FINEGAN, Supt. of Public Instruction of Pennsylvania.
